Exploring Seaside objects at The Herbert

INTRODUCTION

Session length: 1 hr 30 minutes including a 45 minute facilitated session and 45 minute independent visit to the galleries

Session Description: KS1

For costs and booking information see website.

This session will enable your class to discover aspects of visiting the seaside in Victorian times in comparison to today. They will handle Victorian objects such as an icecream maker and try on replica Victorian costume.

This teacher's resource pack has been designed to support the KS1 school curriculum.

Within the pack you will find a selection of cross curricular activities supporting the development of key skills and other useful resources to complement your work in the classroom. The activities are suitable to be carried out pre or post visit to the Herbert and we strongly recommend a visit to the museum to get the most out of your pack.

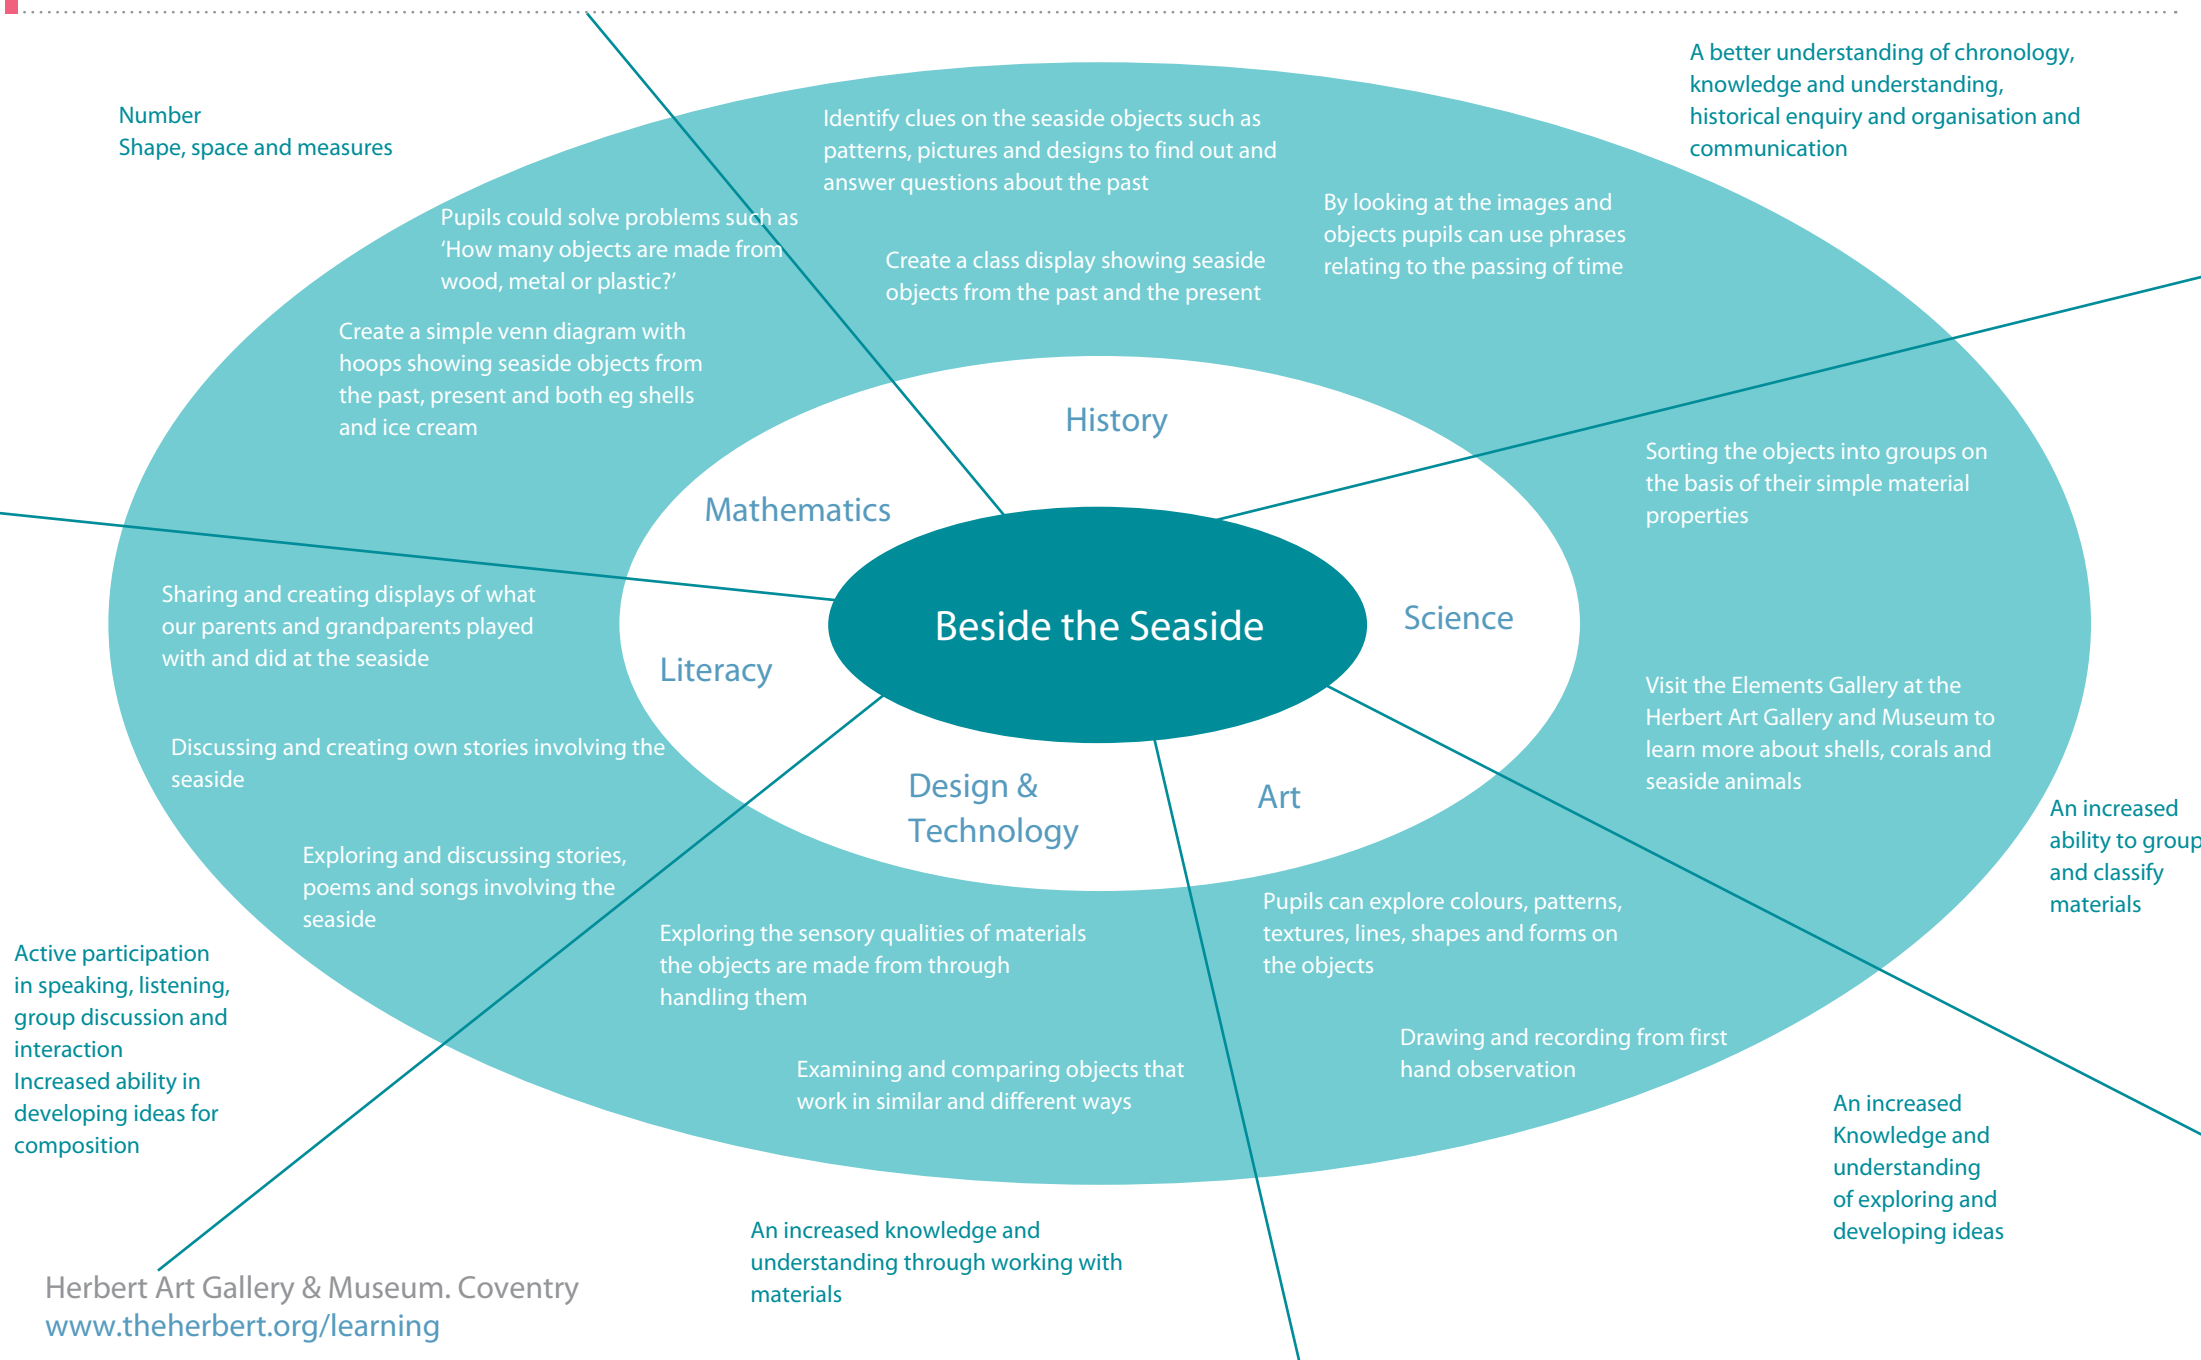

Learning Outcomes

Through attending this session your children will build on the following skills:

- Active participation in speaking and listening through group discussion and interaction
- A better understanding of chronology and improved knowledge and understanding of history
- Improved knowledge and understanding of materials
- An increased ability to grouping and classify materials

Dressing up in Victorian seaside costume at the Herbert

Victorian parasol

A Victorian parasol would mainly have been used to keep the sun off rather than rain.

This can be handled during the Active Learning Session and a similar version can be seen in the Victorian section of the History Galleries

Flask

This thermos flask is from the 1930s and like today is used to keep drinks hot or cold.

This can be handled during the Active Learning Session.

Bucket

This is a 1950s tin bucket used by children when they visited the seaside. The spade would have been made from wood. You can see this one is more decorative than some of the modern examples.

This can be handled during the Active Learning Session.

Modern bucket and spade

This is a modern plastic bucket and spade from 2007, for playing in the sand at the seaside.

This can be handled during the Active Learning Session.

Victorian soft drink bottle

This is a Victorian drinking bottle and would have possibly held lemonade. There was a glass ball at the top to stop the fizz from disappearing.

This can be handled during the Active Learning Session.

Modern soft drink bottle

This is a modern drinking bottle, from 2007, which can be taken on a picnic.

This can be handled during the Active Learning Session.

Jelly shoes

These are modern jelly shoes, from 2007, which are worn by children in summer and at the beach. They have been around since the 1980s.

This can be handled during the Active Learning Session.

Sun protection cream

This is a bottle of sun cream. Today we are more aware of the issues of health regarding the sun.

This can be handled during the Active Learning Session.

Souvenirs

This is a selection of souvenirs bought from various seaside locations across Britain.

This can be handled during the Active Learning Session.

Ice cream scoop

This is an ice cream scoop from the 1950s.

This can be handled during the Active Learning Session.

Shell

Selection of shells

This is a small collection of shells from the seaside.

These can be handled during the Active Learning Session.

Victorian: Relating to or belonging to the period in history from 1837-1901 when Queen Victoria was on the throne.

Parasol: A parasol is similar to an umbrella, but is for protecting from the sun not the rain and is made of material.

Flask: A flask is a bottle like container, which can keep water, drinks or soup usually warm but also cold.

Souvenir: Souvenirs are bought when people visit places to remind them of their visit.
