EXHIBITION AND EVENTS AT THE HERBERT ART GALLERY & MUSEUM

FACE TO FACE from the Natural History Museum features emotive portraits of gorillas, chimpanzees, orang-utans and bonobos and highlights the vitality and intelligence of these magnificent and threatened animals - our closest biological relatives.

Reproduced at over two metres high, each of the 30 photographs displayed tells a personal story and encourages us to consider our relationship with, and our treatment of the natural world. It does this by bringing us face to face with some of the individual animals that have been most deeply affected by the actions of humans.

ROOTS

31 July - 26 September Upstairs in Galleries 2 & 3 FREE

Roots is a contemporary art and natural history installation inspired by Face to Face, featuring works by Katie Boyce and objects never seen together before from the Herbert's collections.

The installation provokes the visitor to question their own impact on man's closest relatives, opening up topics that often get over-looked. The themes of deforestation, extinction and the links between humans and animals are explored through photography and installation based sculpture.

Roots also includes a sensory display, offering a closer look into the theory that humans and animals are closely related, looking at their emotions, intelligence and use of tools.

The Big Treetop is waiting to be discovered by children and their families throughout the summer. Search the Big Treetop to discover, create or become almost anything – this is a place where your imagination can take control!

In The Big Treetop continues the tradition of work strongly influenced by the Reggio Emilia approach to creative play, offering open-ended activities and encouraging choices. The exhibition is designed for adults with children under 8 years, with an added focus on under 3s.

This is a drop-in event. No need to book but at busy times you may be asked to wait. Children must be accompanied by an adult at all times.
