BBC Walking with Beasts Exhibition

2 July – 30 October 2011

Since the dinosaurs died out over 65 million years ago, our planet has been dominated by an amazing and diverse range of mammals. In 2001 the BBC brought a number of them back to life in their six-part series BBC Walking with Beasts. Featuring large scale models including woolly mammoths, sabre tooth cats, and Neanderthal man along with skeletons and animatronic heads, this exhibition promises to be as engaging as it is visually spectacular.

Using animation, touch screen computers and hands-on interactives this exhibition shows some of the science behind the series. Blue screen technology offers the opportunity for visitors to be transported back in time, and walk, on screen, with the beasts. BBC Walking with Beasts Exhibition will tell you more about these fantastic creatures and the times during which they lived.

A Tour-Ex Exhibition produced under license from BBC Worldwide
